

SCOTTISH RECORDER
ORCHESTRA

Musical Director Ian Wilson

Concert

Sunday 17th June 2018, 6 pm

St Margaret's Scottish Episcopal Church
Kilmarnock Road, Glasgow

Ian Wilson is the principal recorder professor at the Guildhall School of Music & Drama, the Head of Woodwind at Eton College and is the visiting recorder specialist at the North East of Scotland Music School in his hometown of Aberdeen. He is a founder member of the recorder quartet The Flautadors, with whom he has recorded four highly acclaimed albums of British repertoire spanning over 500 years.

Ian has performed as a soloist with many of Europe's period instrument orchestras and as a chamber musician has performed in many European festivals including the Auvergne and Innsbruck Early Music Festivals, the Edinburgh Festival, Skálholt Festival in Iceland and the BBC Proms.

Outside classical music, Ian can be heard on the latest albums by the band Paris Motel and his live performance with Vashti Bunyan on the BBC's Jools Holland show featured on the show's 15 year anniversary DVD. In 2008 his career was the subject of a documentary for the Icelandic National Broadcasting Service and in 2010, Ian had the pleasure of teaching Janet Street-Porter for the Sky Arts programme First Love.

The Scottish Recorder Orchestra (SRO) was founded in 2002 by Valerie Flook and Eileen Silcocks, who was also the Musical Director. The SRO has around 50 members who come from all over Scotland and, occasionally, England. They play all sizes of recorders, from garklein (two sizes smaller than the descant or 'school' recorder) to sub-contrabass, which requires a ceiling height of over 8 ft.

The repertoire covers seven centuries of music, from the very ancient to new works composed specifically for the SRO, and includes arrangements of pieces written originally for voices or for other combinations of instruments.

In September 2017 Ian Wilson became the new Musical Director of the orchestra.
